

THE CGP ALUMNI NETWORK: IDEA AND MISSION ...

... THE IDEA

The complex processes of globalization have substantial effects not only on each citizen but on educational systems too. The CGP and its educational programs aim at enabling its high potential students to successfully act and interact in the fast changing environments of the various cultural, geographical and political spaces. This is why the impressive body of knowledge that the CGP offers is tailored specifically to broaden the education of young professionals.

Participants of the CGP programs come from widely differing cultural and professional backgrounds and have a shared interest in global politics and international affairs. To carry the idea of the Center for Global Politics further we have created an alumni network to bring together the various personalities, business branches, political spheres and countries.

... THE MISSION

The CGP sees one of its prime responsibilities in the establishment and maintenance of flexible, resilient student and alumni networks. The main focus of these networks centers on providing access to help and advice: To share an informal channel with like-minded people worldwide. Although the CGP alumni network does not advocate political, religious or cultural visions, some central understandings are nevertheless shared: Institutions matter and can work, as the EU example demonstrates. Furthermore, secularism is embraced as a basic principle of organizing post-modern societies.

In this regard the alumni network aims at enabling professionals to become more competitive through working with public, social and corporate partners as well as network members. And while concentrating on the professional, let's not forget the personal - and the possibilities presented by this aspect of building international friendships across cultural and geographical divides.
